I. READING

On Sunday morning, 2nd September 1666 the fire started in London. A baker in Pudding Lane forgot to put out his oven fire before he went to bed. In the early morning, sparks from the oven fell onto some wood. Soon the baker's house was on fire. The fire spread quickly through the city. It was called the Great Fire of London.

After many weeks of hot weather and no rain, everything was very dry. The fire burned for a long time because it was windy, the wooden houses with thatched roofs were close together and the streets were narrow.

People ran away from the fire across the River Thames or to the hills in the north of London.

They could see flames for miles around from the hills. Luckily, strong winds stopped the fire from spreading south of the river. The fire burned until Thursday night.

It destroyed over two square kilometres of the city: 13,200 houses and 87 churches (including St Paul's Cathedral) were burnt down. About 200,000 thousand people lost their homes.

Officially, only six people died because many managed to escape. The fire in 1212 killed 3,000 people.

Today, the place of the bakery in Pudding Lane is marked by a tall column, the Monument.

The architect Christopher Wren designed it. It was built between 1671 and 1677 to commemorate the Great Fire of London. In the 17th century scientists used the Monument as a laboratory for experiments on gravity. If you climb 311 steps to the top, you get a certificate.
